

Research Artifact 1

For this first Artifact of mine I looked into a video by CNA Insider on what happens when you give up your pet. This was set in Singapore with the interviewer asking shelters what they go through and how much space do they have for pets and looking at how much the abandonment of pets has increased very quickly since COVID. In Singapore shelters are struggling running at almost full capacity that they can hold of abandoned pets some keeping 10-5% of capacity open only to emergencies. A lot spoke that they struggle with their capacity and they are doing as much as they can and they stated that they went from receiving 1 phone call to 2-4 phone calls a week. They also stressed that they would have to reject the people that call or come to the shelter to give their pet away when they are full capacity. Some just dump their pets in the street if the shelters don't answer or take their pets in.

A lot of these pets feel like they live in a jail with some animals being at shelters for more than 5 years with a slim chance of getting adopted and all because they are not big and fluffy or cute. Most of these animals get walked by volunteers only and if there aren't any volunteers they will never be walked and live in their little cell for as long as they will. Another thing I learned is that since these pets that are being released in the streets most are not neutered and go on to give offspring and cause even more pets to be living in the streets and need rescuing. Another issue that I learned throughout this interview was that a lot of owners do backyard breeding with their pets to earn money and most of the time it's not safe and not humane what they do.

A main reason on why pets are being abandoned is due to the rise in costs since COVID and when a pet becomes old or is sick pet bills may become too much for the owners that they will not be able to pay the bills and will end up giving them away or leaving them alone in the streets. Overall through watching this interview it really gave me more insight on what goes on with the shelters and how they struggle and show their dedication and they also show how they would love to help all of the pets that come through their doors but the lack of funding and shelter is not enough for every pet and they can only do so much. I got to also understand why some owners give up their pets for example the rise in costs of vet bills and the rise of food and other costs that have gone up since COVID has happened. I hope I can continue to learn and see what other things go into when it comes to pet abandonment and other reasons to why it happens.

Second Interview

This time I went looking to find out more in depth about what happens when pets are dumped and abandoned rather than looking at how pet shelters are handling this and what they go through everyday in order to keep these pets safe. I ended up gaining a lot of great valuable information that I was able to learn through this article and honestly to say that I was very sad when reading this article because it's just so heartbreaking to see how pets are being mistreated and abandoned by their owners. Most of these pets get abandoned and live in constant fear, especially since they just got betrayed by a person they really trusted. It's hard for them to trust again. A lot of these pets are hard to approach when wanting to rescue them and you might even encounter yourself getting bit by one of them if you try to rescue one. It is sad when finding out that they do not do it because they want to but because they are afraid and do not know who to trust when it comes to being careful for themselves. What's really sad is when the pets being abandoned are newborns which is almost an instant death when leaving them to live on the streets on their own. Most of these pets that get thrown into the streets develop diseases that are not safe and they end up giving more offspring making it harder to minimize the number of abandoned pets that are left on the streets which is a main reason as to why shelters struggle to keep open space for these animals and this is one of the reasons why they struggle having open space for them because of lack of neutering and care. Throughout reading the article I was able to gather my thoughts and find out how pets get thrown out and what happens to them. Another thing that was not included in the article but from personal experience just on the internet or actual news, there's evil people in this world that enjoy the abuse of animals and would find any stray animals most popular being cats and being brutally violent with them in many ways that are very brutal which results in these animals dying. In China this has been a constant trending topic. There's been multiple cats that go missing and then get found in the most brutal ways with some of these people recording themselves killing them and selling them or uploading them for the world to see.

That is where I got my information from a man who got in trouble for doing this to cats. And it's the fact that most of these people do not get the consequences they deserve and get let off easily. Although it's not as high as China, it is and has been happening in America as well. This is just one of the few cruel things that are being done to animals around us. In my next post I will go into depth talking about what other things are being done to animals that are not only cruel but hateful.

Third Interview

Moving on I ended up finding two different resources for this part. I started to find out more things about the skin and makeup industry. I was not aware until now that some of the animals that are used for testing in their labs are sometimes grabbed from off the street? This came as an utter shock to me especially when knowing that pet cruelty especially pet testing I think should become illegal and not allowed. It's the reason why we have cruelty free on some of our favorite brands. I got to learn a lot especially from this article because a lot of these animals when being used as tests for these you would think they would be okay. Some get diseases while some end up dying from this testing. They suffer a lot and especially those that get taken from the streets. They are already suffering from getting dumped by their owners and now they would have to deal even more being used as an experiment. Another thing I found out is that most of these animals that are left on the street that don't get rescued tend to get snatched for butchery or testing and many other forms of cruelty that are being done on these poor animals.

Due to the part that there is not a lot of space for shelters to save these animals and to the lack of funding to where these shelters are sometimes fully supported by themselves or with the support of volunteers, there is not a lot of people who can help and with the fact that most of these animals that are getting thrown onto the streets are not neutered give them chances to have offspring furthermore causing more problems and them rising in population which then the babies will have great chances to dying when living on the streets and them being on streets give chances for them to experience animal cruelty and abuse and animal testing.
